Miscellaneous.

The Boy Heroes.
When Kentucky was an infant State, and before the foot of civilization had trodden her giant forests, there lived upon the banks of the Green River, an old hunter by the name of Slater. His hut was upon the bank of the stream, and, save a small patch of some dozen acres that had been cleared by his own axe, he was shut up by dense forests. Slater had two children at home with him—two sons, Philip and Daniel—the former fourteen, and the latter twelve years of age. His wife was with him, but she had been for several years an almost helpless cripple from the effect of severe rheumatism.

It was early in the spring, and the old hunter had been to carry the produce of his winter's labor, which consisted mostly of furs. He had received quite a sum of money and had brought it home with him, and he meant that his children should start on their journey with the world.

One evening just as the family were sitting down to the frugal supper, they were attracted by the sudden howling of the dogs, and as Slater went to the door to see what was the matter, he saw three men approaching.

He quickly ordered off the dogs, and the strangers approached the door. They asked for something to eat, and also for lodging for the night. John Slater was not a man to refuse a request of this kind, and he asked the strangers to wait until he could get them something to eat.

They waited until the old hunter had brought them something to eat, and then they asked for lodging for the night. John
